

Stephanie Martel

My art comes from a desire to share kindness + creativity with others. Even though I started formally painting later in life, this inspiration was there all along, taking different forms. When I started to paint acrylic abstracts on canvas, the images began to bloom.

I am motivated by the courage people show in everyday life; each sentiment from my work encourages people of all ages to listen to their heart. This is especially true for children who are growing, learning+ finding their unique voice.

I use a variety of materials including acrylics, pens, inks, oil pastels, collage papers, ephemera, stamps and markers. I love to work in layers, slowly letting the painting reveal itself before adding characters or small details. I love using different materials to create texture + I'm always experimenting.

I want to increase my viewer's joy + encourage them to live a creative life in gentle and forgiving ways. I can only hope that this desire I have to help and encourage others, shows through in my art.
